

Guide to Verifying Physician/Practitioner Statement (DOP-L3) or Medical Documentation

Disclaimer

This document is intended to be used as a reference and procedural guide to verifying physician/practitioner statements pursuant to the need for such a statement as authorized by the Division of Personnel's (DOP) Administrative Rule, W. VA. Code R, §143-1-1 et seq. The general information this document contains should not be construed to supersede, enhance, or diminish the provisions of any federal or State law or any properly promulgated DOP rule. In the case of any inconsistencies, the statutory and regulatory provisions shall prevail. This document is written with the understanding that the DOP is not engaged in rendering legal services. If legal advice or assistance is required, the services of an attorney should be sought. Supervisors should also refer to the policies, rules, and regulations and consult with the human resources office within their respective agencies.

For technical assistance concerning specific situations, employees and employers may contact the DOP's Employee Relations Section at (304) 414-1853.

In accordance with the DOP Administrative Rule, W. VA. Code R, §143-1-1 et seq., employees requesting sick leave or annual leave upon exhaustion of sick leave, for themselves, a family member, or a combination thereof, for more than three (3) consecutive scheduled work days or scheduled shifts must, immediately upon his or her return to work, provide a DOP prescribed Physician/Practitioner Statement (DOP-L3) from a health care provider establishing the legitimacy of the need for and duration of the employee's absence.

The Physician/Practitioner Statement must be complete and provide sufficient information to verify the medical necessity of the leave. If an employee submits a complete and sufficient statement signed by their healthcare provider, the employer may not request additional information from the provider. The DOP-prescribed Physician/Practitioner Statement is considered "incomplete" or "insufficient" if one or more of the applicable entries on the form are vague, unclear, or non-responsive.

The employer does not need the employee's authorization to authenticate any medical documentation or to seek clarification on previously submitted information. If medical documentation appears incomplete, insufficient, altered, or falsified, the employer may contact the health-care provider to verify its authenticity or clarify the information provided. If it is determined that an employee has submitted altered or falsified medical documentation, the agency will implement appropriate disciplinary action in accordance with established policies and procedures.

Alternatively, an employee may provide the appropriate agency personnel with written authorization for the release of information to obtain additional information from their healthcare provider regarding the date(s) of treatment and any limitations indicated on the medical documentation.

Any request to the health care provider should be limited to the most basic, factual inquiry, specifically, providing the health care provider with a copy of the medical documentation and simply requesting the health care provider to verify that the document was, in fact, completed and signed by that office/professional as presented.

To make contact, the employer must use a human resources professional, a leave administrator, or a management official. Under no circumstances should the employee's direct supervisor have access to the employee's medical documentation or contact the employee's health care provider. Information beyond what is required to verify the need for leave may not be solicited.

Special Provisions for Job-Protected Leave

Measures for requesting additional information related to job-protected leaves of absence or workplace accommodations under federal and State laws, such as the federal Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), both the federal and West Virginia Pregnant Workers Fairness Acts (PWFA), the Providing Urgent Maternal Protections for Nursing Mothers Act (PUMP Act) under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the West Virginia Parental Leave Act (PLA), and the Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA), must be coordinated and executed in compliance with all applicable federal and State regulations.

Incomplete or insufficient information returned by an employee on job-protected leave requires the employer to advise the employee of the statement's deficiencies and provide the employee seven (7) days to have his or her provider "cure" the statement, providing sufficient information to establish the need and period for leave. If the previously submitted documentation appears altered or falsified, the employer may contact the health care provider directly to verify authenticity or clarify the information without obtaining the employee's permission.

When an employee's request involves limitations or restrictions related to pregnancy, childbirth, or related medical conditions, the federal and State PWFA require the employer to engage in an interactive process to identify reasonable accommodations unless doing so would impose an undue hardship. Requests for accommodation under the PWFA may require only the documentation necessary to confirm the existence of a limitation and the need for accommodation; employers should avoid requesting medical details beyond what is needed to evaluate the accommodation.

Similarly, when an employee's request indicates a potential disability under the ADA, the employer must initiate the interactive process to determine effective reasonable accommodations. Documentation sought under the ADA must be narrowly tailored to understanding the functional limitations and should not duplicate information already provided for FMLA or other leave statutes. Employers must ensure that requests for clarification or additional information comply with ADA standards regarding confidentiality, necessity, and scope.

When an employee's situation implicates more than one applicable statute, such as FMLA, PWFA, PUMP, PLA, or the ADA, the employer must evaluate the request under each law and apply the provisions that best meet the employee's documented needs. When overlapping protections exist, the employer should administer the leave or workplace accommodation in the manner most favorable to the employee, provided that doing so remains consistent with federal and State requirements. This approach ensures that employees receive the fullest benefit available under the law while maintaining compliance with all regulatory obligations. When an employer has sufficient information to determine that an employee's condition qualifies for FMLA, and the employee meets the eligibility requirements under the Act, the employer must designate the leave as FMLA-protected and run it concurrently with any other applicable leave benefit in accordance with FMLA regulations.
